Measurements will determine the average radon level of exposure throughout the building. An elevated concentration of radon is defined as being at or above 4 pCi/L.

11. If levels are above 4 pCi/L, consult Dr. K. Sheikh or Mr. Beatty Deborg of the State Health Department at 348-3526 for follow-up advice.

12. Some corrective measures in homes with high radon are quite simple. The procedures involve openings to the outside from underneath crawl spaces, scaling cracks and crevices in foundation walls and floors and increasing venting to the outside of the house.

Meadows--Fleming

The Oak Grove Presbyterian Church in Hillsboro was the setting for the marriage of Miss Suzanne Yvette Fleming, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Joseph Fleming, of Hillsboro, to James Preston Meadows, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Preston Meadows, of Mill Point.

The Rev. W. Clay Macaulay officiated at the double ring ceremony performed at two o'clock in the afternoon on August 13, 1988.

Traditional wedding music was provided by Mrs. Linda VanReenen at the piano and the organ.

The Rev. Ruth Simmons, a relative of the bride, sang three solos: "The Wedding Song," "On Eagle's Wings" and "May the God of Love."

A large fern in an attractive brass planter centered between two seven-branch candelabra trimmed with white carnations, baby's breath, greenery and blue satin bows adorned the altar. White satin bows marked the family pews. Another large fern in a matching brass planter decorated the vestibule.

Escorted to the altar by her father and given in marriage by her parents, the bride wore a gown of regal satin. Heavily pearlized, silk-floss lace accented the bodice which featured a scooped neckline edged with pearls as were the pouf sleeves. The bouffant skirt flowed from a deep basque waist to a chapel length train. Her fingertip length veil, attached to a circlet of dainty silk flowers, was made for her by her mother. The bride wore an heirloom lavalier necklace which had been Douds. The bride carried a lace-covered Bible with white carnations, blue statice and white satin streamers tied in love knots, which was first carried by her mother at her wedding and later used in two other family weddings.

Maid of honor was the groom's sister, Miss Donna Meadows. Bridesmaids were Mary Ellen Jennings, of Fellowsville, and Darlene Brown McCoy, of Renick. All three attendants were dressed in tea length dresses of ice blue moire taffeta with matching satin shoes and carried colonial bouquets of blue tipped carnations, daisies, pink statice and baby's breath with blue lace ribbon.

Michael Meadows served his brother as best man. Patrick Hinkle and Samuel Sibley, former college roommates of the groom, were ushers, and Page Meadows, cousin of the groom, served as junior usher and acolyte.

The groom wore a black tuxedo with black tie and cummerbund and a white carnation boutonniere.

Identical attire was worn by the best man and ushers with their black tuxedos being accented with pale blue cummerbunds and ties and blue-tipped carnation boutonnieres.

For her daughter's wedding, Mrs. Fleming chose a street-length dress in pink with a white lace collar. Mrs. Meadows was attired in a street-length dress of light beige. Both mothers wore corsages of double pink carnations with baby's breath and pink lace bows.

Among the special guests were Mrs. Ruth House, of Clarksburg, and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Fleming, of Panama City, Florida, grandparents of the bride. Both grandmothers wore corsages of double white carnations with baby's breath and white lace bows.

Mrs. Glenda Shafer, of Seebert, tended the guest book, while Joy Meadows, cousin of the groom, was in charge of programs. Mrs. Barbara McNeel Beard served as wedding director. The sanctuary was decorated by Mrs. Lee McNeel. The ceremony was videotaped by Thomas VanReenen and the photographer was David Arrington.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the Church Fellowship Hall. The three tiered wedding cake, trimmed with blue roses and topped with blue satin bells, was cut and served by great-aunts of the bride, Mrs. James Dolan, of Clarksburg, and Mrs. Charles Topper, of Martinsburg. The cake was flanked on one side by a lovely arrangement of blue tipped carnations, white chrysanthemums, pink statice, daisies, and baby's breath with blue candles in silver candlestick holders, and on the other side by a lifetime memory candle, a gift from the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Ruth House.

At a separate table, punch was served by Ms. Ellen Galford, of Buckeye, and Miss Leslie Jennings, of Fellowsville. Members of the Evening Circle of the Oak Grove Presbyterian Church who assisted with the reception and the preparation of the delicious pastel mints included Mrs. Opal Moore, Mrs. Mary Alice Beard, Mrs. Sue Hollandsworth, Miss Virginia Kinnison, Mrs. Betty Ingraham, Mrs. Clarice Kellison and Mrs. Wilda Chappell.

A rehearsal dinner hosted by Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Preston Meadows, parents of the groom, and by Mr. and Mrs. Jim Meadows, of Beckley, was held in the Fellowship Hall of the church.

The bride and groom are both 1984 graduates of Pocahontas County High School.

After a honeymoon trip to Blackwater Falls, the couple is residing in Morgantown where both attend West Virginia University. The bride is completing her last year of pharmacy school and the groom will graduate in December with a bachelor's degree in Secondary Math Education.

Pocahontas County OPERA HOUSE SPOTLIGHT

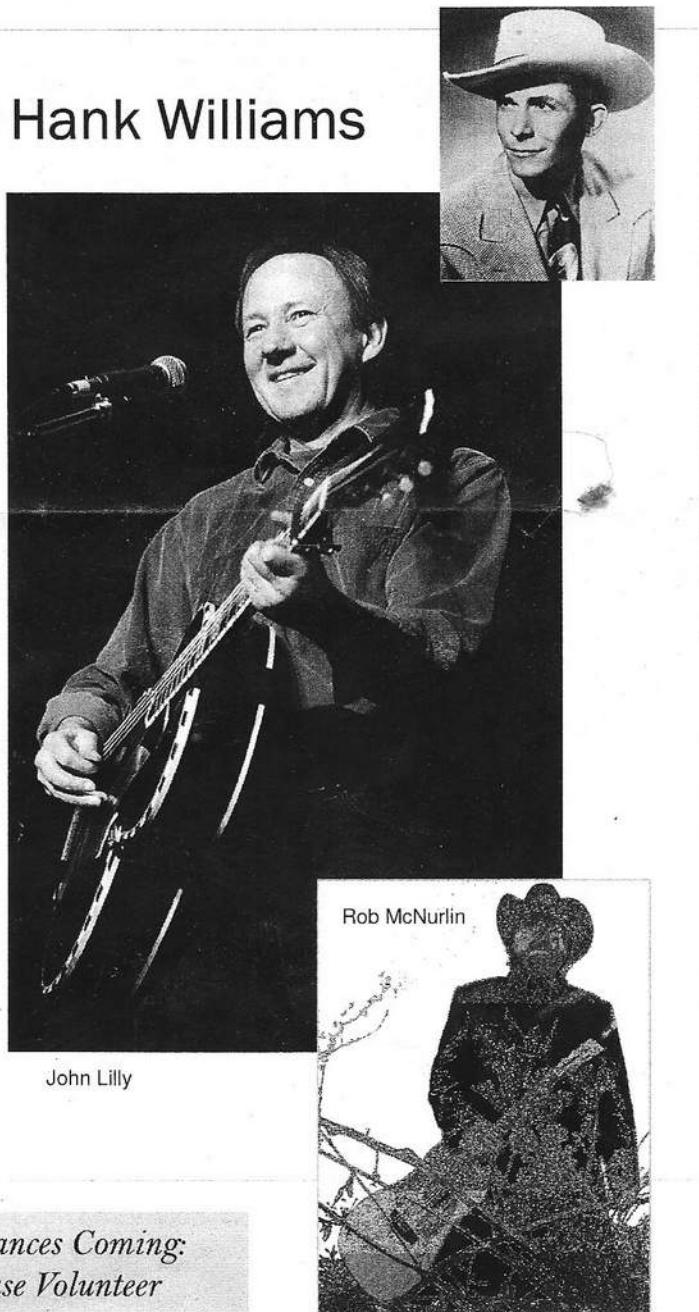

A Tribute to Hank Williams

On Nov. 22, the Opera House will present a special tribute to the legendary Hank Williams by award-winning acoustic musician John Lilly, along with everyone's favorite cowboy, Rob McNurlin.

John Lilly is a multi-talented acoustic music performer from Charleston, WV. Lilly specializes in Americana, roots country, and traditional folk music. According to one reviewer, "If Hank Williams had a sunny disposition, he'd be John Lilly."

Rob McNurlin was raised in Eastern Kentucky. The hymns in church, the Johnny Cash Show on TV, a harmonica from his grandmother, his parents' records, and a guitar on his ninth Christmas set him on a musical path. He later began studying traditional music, learning hundreds of folk, hillbilly-blues, and Gospel tunes.

These talented musicians pay tribute to the great country music icon who, in his short lifetime, pioneered the honky-tonk style and became one of the most influential musicians and songwriters in history.

O'Flaherty

Costa, Dailey, & O'Flaherty

Three talented musicians come together on stage on Saturday, October 18th, with a delightful mix of Old Time and Celtic music and song. Jimmy Costa, Mary Dailey and Patrick O'Flaherty met at the Irish Pub Sunday night session in Lewisburg, and have been thoroughly enjoying each other's music. All three are experienced solo performers and share a common love for the traditional music of Ireland and Appalachia.

Patrick is a multi-instrumentalist and singer from Connemara, Ireland whose music career spans three decades, including tours in America with the Poor Clares and Celtic Folk. He's a master on the mandolin, harmonica and button accordion, as well as singing in Gaelic, his native language.

Jimmy is a local treasure known far and wide in Old Time music circles. He's a skilled player of fiddle, banjo and guitar and is known for his authentic repertoire of Uncle Dave Macon songs. He's also an avid collector and restorer of vintage instruments, tools and other interesting artifacts.

Mary is a gifted singer, songwriter and lover of old Appalachian and Celtic folk songs. She has performed in the mid-Atlantic region for 20 years in a variety of groups and venues, including at the Kennedy Center's Atrium, but "down home" settings remain her favorite.

Performances at the Opera House are informal, family-friendly and open to all. Children are admitted free. The entrance and main seating are handicapped accessible. Persons with disabilities are encouraged to attend; special accommodations can be arranged upon request. For further information call 800-336-7009 or 304-799-6645.

Performances in the 2008-09 Opera House Performance Series are presented with financial assistance through a grant from the West Virginia Division of Culture and History and the National Endowment for the Arts, with approval from the West Virginia Commission on the Arts. Financial support is also provided by Pocahontas County Drama, Fairs and Festivals.

Leah Trent

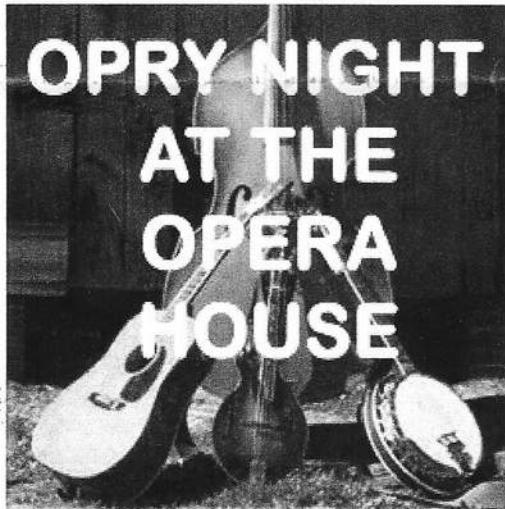

Celebrate the Christmas season a little early this year, with a concert of beautiful holiday music performed by Leah Trent on Sunday, December 7th, at 3 pm. Leah has been playing harp for more than 25 years. She plays the large concert pedal harp, the smaller Irish or Celtic harp, and the very small lap harp.

Leah maintains an active performing schedule, playing with orchestras and smaller ensembles, in addition to playing solo harp for recitals, concerts and private bookings. She is a member of both the American Harp Society and the International Society of Folk Harpers and Craftsmen.

The Ah's

Performing on Friday, October 24th, are The Ahs. The Ahs formed in rural New Hampshire during the spring of 2005, moved to Portland, Oregon in pursuit of musical adventure and now find themselves at home in Hinton, West Virginia. The duet consists of Tony Rogers, a classically trained cellist and founder of the Portland Cello Project, and Amy McIntyre, lifelong singer, songwriter and banjo player. They will be joined at the Opera House by local musicians Erica Lipps, on cello, and Paolo Marks on cello, mandolin and fiddle. The percussive pings of the banjo and the lush echoes of the cello along with intricate soprano and baritone harmonies help give The Ahs a unique sound.

All performances at 7:30 pm unless otherwise noted.

The Opera House will be transformed into the Opry House for a night of great home-style music and dancing on Saturday, November 15th. Featured performers are Mud Hole Control, The Classic Country Ramblers and The Appalachian Country Cloggers.

Mud Hole Control is made up of band members Charlie Loudermilk on banjo, Junior Spencer on fiddle, Cannonball Loudermilk on bass and Charlie Loudermilk, Jr. on guitar. Charlie and Junior have played square dances together regularly since the 1950s. By the mid 1970's, Charlie's sons were into their teens and began playing with the band. Together they play with a level of energy that is hard to resist.

The Appalachian Country Cloggers were organized in 1991 by Lou Maiuri and are dedicated to the preservation of early mountain traditional dance forms. They demonstrate southern Appalachian square dance figures, Appalachian clogging steps and old-time flatfoot steps. Founder Lou Maiuri is a regular caller and instructor at the Vandalia Gathering, Appalachian String Band Festival and August Heritage Festival. In July 2000 he had the honor of dancing on the stage of the original Grand Old Opry with the Melvin Sloan Dancers.

Bill Hefner and Paul Bennett have been playing music together off and on for over 30 years. They, along with Paul's son, Justin, form the Classic Country Ramblers. Picking and singing old-time country and gospel tunes, they'll take you for an unforgettable ride down memory lane.

Gwen Clingman Honored

By Jonathan Wright

Seventy-nine-year-old Gwen Clingman, long a familiar face in downtown Lewisburg—especially around lunchtime—was recently honored for 47 years of service by the Lewisburg Merchants' and Professionals' Association. Henry Hubbard, the group's president, presented Mrs. Clingman with a Lewisburg pin and an assortment of signed greetings from Lewisburg business persons.

Mrs. Clingman declined to be photographed but said she began business at her Washington Street location April 1, 1945, when she and her husband, the late Garland Clingman, purchased the business from the previous owner, Henry Jackson. Jackson had operated the business for 45 years. The market originally sold mostly meat items.

Clingman's Market is best known today for its in-store restaurant, "Gwen's Kitchen," serving a wide variety of meats and vegetables for lunch Monday through Saturday. The restaurant regularly draws customers from throughout downtown Lewisburg and beyond. Additionally, Mrs. Clingman provides catering service to numerous groups throughout the Greenbrier Valley.

Mrs. Clingman was born in Frost to Clarence and Mamie Jordan. Her husband died in 1977. She is the mother of three daughters: Alice Hollingsworth of Lewisburg; Nancy Deitz of Staunton, Virginia; and Sharon Shutzer of Freehold, New Jersey. She has eight grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Dear Editor:

I remember the first time that I ever set eyes on the "big town" of Marlinton. Early impressions are the strongest and longest lasting. Since I was only six years old, this trip to my father's hometown could qualify as a memorable one. It did. With each subsequent trip over the past thirty-four years, the magic of that first moment has not diminished.

My father laid the necessary ground work on that first trip. Listening to him talk about the "big town" of Marlinton, and its more novel inhabitants with those strange names, would inspire awe in any six year old.

I sat on the edge of the backseat so long that I just knew I'd be seven when we got there. Columbus, Ohio, was probably in a different country. I sat bug-eyed as my dad mentioned names like Watoga, Seneca, Minnehaha, Pocahontas, etc., like they were real places. Could it be? The people he talked about were just as unusual. Names like Chisel, Oren, Poolie, Curley, and Bev were strange to me, though I did know a Bev; but she was just a girl. I couldn't wait to arrive. I knew that stress had taken its toll because I had used the bathroom in every gas station from Columbus to Marlinton. I was real proud of that because Dad told Mom, "We'll never have to worry about running out of gas with Brady along!" Wow! Not many six year olds were bestowed that kind of praise.

By the time we had reached Kennison Mountain, I knew that I had absorbed too much adult conversation. My head felt like it would explode. Dad gave me a stick of gum and said it had more to do with the altitude, whatever that was.

It was dusk and I could no longer see the beautiful mountain forest that flashed by, outside my car window. I don't know how long I napped, but I was awakened when the car stopped. "Is this it?" I asked. "Sort of," said Dad. "It's right below. You see those lights down there, that's the 'big town' of Marlinton." My dad could not carry a tune in a bucket, but he spoke those words with such quiet unction that it was as melodic as any song.

I stood next to Dad and gazed at the lights below. It was like looking down at the night sky and viewing the stars from above. It was magical! I have always stopped at the same downward bend in the road and absorbed the beauty of the town, savoring the images and feelings that first night, so long ago with father, had evoked.

After crossing the bridge over the Greenbrier, we finally pulled to a stop in front of my uncle Ed's house. My Aunt Junie would leave the porch exclaiming, "Burton's here, everybody! Burton's here!" I felt very proud to be the son of somebody that was as important as my dad. My Aunt Gay would then call Aunt Lois and friends to let them know that "Burton's here!" There was such excitement as a six year old had ever seen.

The next morning Dad would take me on the "grand tour" of Marlinton. Everyone would stop and say, "Well, Burton, how you been doing?" "Don't tell me this one's yours," He'd just laugh and say something like, "Yeah, I guess I'll have to claim him." I'd swell my chest up again, feeling really secure and important. All this attention at such an early age was a lot to deal with. I was twelve before I grew into my hat size.

Wow!! the "big town" of Marlinton was great. I could roam all over town and no one got mad at me. I sure couldn't do that in Columbus. I found out that I had cousins too. I wasn't quite sure what the term meant, but I liked the kids a lot.

The greatest thing about Marlinton is that, though it changes, the people do not. They are still as friendly today as they were on my first visit.

My dad's back in the "big town" of Marlinton. It will have been two years this April when Dad was told he had no more time. As I looked at him with teary eyes and asked about his last wishes, he calmly said, "I believe I want to go home." I was glad he chose as he did. I would not imagine my dad buried in Columbus. His father and his father's father rest in Marlinton. It is fitting that Burton Wagner lies with them.

"Burton's here! Burton's here," in the "big Town" of Marlinton. Marlinton must have left a pretty good impression on him too.

School Board Ordered to Re-instate Grace Wigal With Back Pay

In a decision issued last Thursday, the Board of Education was ordered by a hearing examiner for the W. Va. Education Employees Grievance Board to re-instate Grace Jane Wigal to her position as teacher at Pocahontas County High School with back pay.

Mrs. Wigal was suspended without pay from her teaching position on September 26, 1983, on the grounds of immorality following her arrest on a felony charge of possession of marijuana with intent to deliver. Her husband, Gary, was arrested the same day as was several others who were involved. The marijuana involved in the incident was being grown on property owned by the Wigals.

At the time of her suspension Mrs. Wigal waived her right to a hearing but reserved the right to petition for reinstatement.

In December of 1983 she entered into an agreement with the U. S. Department of Justice to cooperate with the investigation into the marijuana cultivation and sale, pay $25,000 to the government, as the profits obtained due to drug activity, cooperate with the IRS, and forfeit the land where the drug was growing.

According to federal authorities Mrs. Wigal complied with the terms of this agreement. Although the investigation continued for some time, the end result was that Mrs. Wigal was not indicted by either federal or state grand juries nor were indictments sought.

Beginning in December 1983, Mrs. Wigal made several attempts to be re-instated to her teaching position. At that time the Board continued her suspension until it could be determined that her involvement would not impair her effectiveness as a teacher. The suspension was extended again in April 1984. Attempts to settle the issue ran from negotiations to Mrs. Wigal's filing for a writ of mandamus in Pocahontas County Circuit Court in March 1985. Her request for a mandamus ruling was dismissed.

On April 15, 1986, the Board of Education dismissed Mrs. Wigal from teaching position for reason of immorality, specifically for the cultivation and manufacture of marijuana.

Following her dismissal, she filed a grievance with the Employees Grievance Board. Hearing Examiner Sue Keller was assigned to handle the grievance and issue a ruling.

Hearings to gather evidence were held on May 6 and July 26.

were held on May 9 and July 25, 1986, and April 13, 1987. Witnesses at the hearings included former Prosecuting Attorney Steve Hunter, School Superintendent Carl Holland, five past and present board of education members, a number of citizens, PCHS Principal Kenneth Vance, a PCHS guidance counselor, and Mr. and Mrs. Wigal.

Mr. Hunter reviewed the events relating to the arrest of the Wigals. Dr. Holland went over the various actions by the Board of Education. The board members testified that they believe Mrs. Wigal could not return to PCHS as an effective teacher due to community response to her arrest. Members of the general public testified both in favor and in opposition to Mrs. Wigal's return to the county's classrooms. The counselor said that, while problems could potentially occur, Mrs. Wigal's return to PCHS would not affect a large portion of the student body. Mr. Vance stated his belief that Mrs. Wigal would continue to do a good teaching job if returned to her position although there may be some problems in the community.

Mrs. Wigal admitted that she knew of her husband's involvement with marijuana but claimed she was not aware of the extent of his involvement. She said she did not participate in the marijuana cultivation and strenuously disapproved of his role. She admitted, however, that she did not report the marijuana production to the authorities.

Mr. Wigal testified that his wife was so upset about the situation with the marijuana that she moved in with her mother for a time and threatened a divorce. To avoid further provocation, Mr. Wigal said he kept from her the extent of his involvement. He said he did give her money received from the marijuana but did not believe she knew the source of the money as they had been involved with the sale of a tract of land at the time.

Ms. Keller's decision noted that while Mrs. Wigal had been employed as a teacher in Pocahontas County there is no indication that her teaching performance has ever been less than satisfactory. Even a number of the witnesses for the Board commented that she was a good teacher.

In reaching her decision in the case, Ms. Keller noted that W. Va. law does allow a board of education to suspend or dismiss an employee for immorality, but this action must be imposed only upon a showing of just cause and any doubt must be resolved in favor of the employee.

She ruled that no evidence was given that showed Mrs. Wigal's ability to satisfactorily perform her duties as a teacher has been directly affected by her arrest. The Board, according to Ms. Keller, failed to establish a connection "between the events which occurred in private, did not directly involve any student or school personnel, and did not result in any criminal charges being brought against the grievant and the duties she performed as a teacher."

Ms. Keller ordered that the back pay be awarded from December 19, 1983, the date of Mrs. Wigal's first request to be re-instated to her teaching position.

The Board of Education has thirty days to decide whether to appeal the decision in favor of Mrs. Wigal to the circuit court.

SCHOOL TALK

School Talk
By Gibbs Kinderman

Elsewhere in today's paper there is an article describing the hearing examiner's decision in the Grace Jane Wigal Case. In short, the examiner ruled that Mrs. Wigal should be reinstated to her position as a teacher at PCHS and awarded back wages from December 19, 1983 to the present. The Board of Education has 30 days in which to file an appeal to circuit court, should it choose to do so.

As I see it, the Board has several possible courses of action:

1) Appeal the case to circuit court and then on to the state supreme court if need be. Advantages of this approach would include the Board's upholding the rightness of its decision to suspend and then terminate Mrs. Wigal, and the possibility of a reversal of the hearing examiner's verdict, which would save the county the almost four years back pay. Disadvantages would include the possibility of a final verdict which would result in an even larger payment, since the case would have dragged on another year or two.

2) Accept the hearing examiner's ruling and reinstate Mrs. Wigal. The advantage would be that the case would finally be put to rest. The disadvantages would include the paying out of back wages which will probably amount to around $90,000, and possible strong negative reaction from portions of the community to having Mrs. Wigal return as a teacher in the high school.

3) Attempt to negotiate a settlement with Mrs. Wigal which would involve her resignation as a teacher and a compromise payment in lieu of full back wages. Advantages of this approach would include saving the time and expense of further, and most likely lengthy, court battles; limiting the financial liability the board faces; achieving the Board's stated objective of

Mrs. Wigal out of the case. Disadvantages would include giving up the possibility of a full vindication of the Board's position in court and the possibility of not having to pay out any money, and the possibility that Mrs. Wigal might not be willing to accept a compromise the Board

Spring Cleaning

By Louise McNeill

This story by Louise McNeill Pease, poet laureate of West Virginia, was first published in GOLDENSEAL. Mrs. Pease was born at Buckeye, the daughter of G. D. and Grace McNeill, and died June 16, 1993.

Printed by permission of Ken Sullivan, Editor. Subscriptions for the magazine may be sent to Goldenseal, The Cultural Center, 1900 Kanawha Blvd. East, Charleston, WV 25305, $15 yearly contribution.

Back in those gentle years, 1915-1920, our Pocahontas County household was relatively serene. For despite the Great War, despite Granny's temper fits, and despite Mama's annual bouts with spring housecleaning, our life on the farm still moved to the slow, ancient rhythm of the seasons, and on the leaky roof of our cottage there in the meadow the sun fell quietly and the snow gently, and the sweet summer rain.

My father was a country school-teacher, then later a principal and a professor, and good, even great, at all of these. He was also a part-time farmer, but always a farmer with a book in his pocket and a dream in his head. His name was George Douglas McNeill. Nearly everybody in the neighborhood called him "G.D.," but not to his face.

Mama had once been a school-teacher, too, but now she was a housekeeper, cook, gardener, seamstress, dairy maid, pig woman, chicken raiser, blackberry pie maker. And, moreover, my mother hated dirt. She hated it every day and every season, but particularly when the spring sunshine came in to show it up. So every May or early June she must hold her great spring housecleaning, a rigorous and ancient ritual which we must celebrate from before daybreak until after dead dark.

Not like later when someone work for 35 cents a day.

Thus supported and often with brother Ward, too, staying around to add his carrying power to the festivities, Mama would begin to transfer all our goods and chattels from house to yard. For this was the old custom, to carry every lock, stock, and bobble out of the house, set the wild collection down on the yard grass, scrub it or dust it and sun it; and then, in the late evening, the inside of the house by then scrubbed and squeaky clean, to carry everything back in.

Perhaps the labor was not actually as heavy as it now seems to me, for we had only wooden furniture; and Grandpa's black walnut dining table was only eight feet long; the isinglass parlor stove easy enough for four people to carry; and, besides, the day itself gave forth its air of singular flurry and excitement, of new beginnings and hot soapsuds and cleansing sun.

The first thing Mama would do was to get the parlor stove out and stored for the summer in the smokehouse. Then she would take a hammer and screwdriver and start her attack on the windows—the small-paned, cordless variety—for they must be removed, their casing strips coming down with them; then all the windows lugged out carefully into the dooryard and leaned up against the plank fence to receive their ablutions of warm water and homemade soap.

Then all the furniture, odds and ends, rugs, books, and dishes must be carried or dragged out onto the yard grass and the clothes hung on the clothesline to sun. This great out-going would include, of course, all the old-fashioned beds, with their slats, springs, featherticks and straw ticks—a mass of wood, metal and striped ticking that would be scattered in a confused tangle all across the front yard.

Then the cleaning would begin with buckets of hot water from the boiling kettle and buckets of clean cold water for the rinsing. And of

collar," Downy, Tide, and Chy

Mama would be pouring soapsuds on the glass of windows and washing them with an old rag. Then she would turn the windows over, wash the other side, slosh buckets of rinse water on them, and leave them drying in the sun.

Usually during this initial stage of the festivities, Ward would patiently cleaning out the kitchen stove and stovepipe with a wire brush, sticks and an old feather duster, the winter's collection of soot floating dangerously close to the clothesline and the old dog barking with excitement; the clothes flapping merrily on the line.

The hired woman, left inside the house, would be scrubbing the wide-board floors, dusting the walls and ceilings with a rag-covered broom, and washing the painted woodwork with slathers of brown soap.

Elizabeth and I might be assigned to "red up" the dresser drawers, wash the reams of kitchen utensils, and wipe off G. D.'s multiplying tribe of books. As we cleaned the drawers, there was one drawer we must never open. It was the right-hand upper drawer of Grandpa's black walnut highboy—the drawer that was never opened except by the Head of the House. That was G. D., and G. D. was to town or far off in the field someplace.

We knew Grandpa as the Captain, from his Civil War service, so the drawer was never opened because it was "the Captain's drawer," though by 1920—say 1920 was the year of this specific cleaning—the old Captain had been dead for many years. But his drawer was never opened; and not opened now and then, either, except by the oldest male member—because it is the Captain's drawer. So, back then Elizabeth and I would never open the lower part of the highboy and then start washing the ends, dishes and endless pots and pans.

Back in those gentle years, 1915-1920, our Pocahontas County household was relatively serene. For despite the Great War, despite Granny's temper fits, and despite Mama's annual bouts with spring housecleaning, our life on the farm still moved to the slow, ancient rhythm of the seasons, and on the leaky roof of our cottage there in the meadow the sun fell quietly and the snow gently, and the sweet summer rain.

My father was a country school-teacher, then later a principal and a professor, and good, even great, at all of these. He was also a part-time farmer, but always a farmer with a book in his pocket and a dream in his head. His name was George Douglas McNeill. Nearly everybody in the neighborhood called him "G.D.," but not to his face.

Mama had once been a school-teacher, too, but now she was a housekeep, cook, gardener, seamstress, dairy maid, pig woman, chicken raiser, blackberry pie maker. And, moreover, my mother hated dirt. She hated it every day and every season, but particularly when the spring sunshine came in to show it up. So every May or early June she must hold her great spring housecleaning, a rigorous and ancient ritual which we must celebrate from before daybreak until after dead dark.

Not like later when someone would come in to wash the woodwork in my house, Windex my windows, and I'd lug the box of dusty Christmas decorations upstairs. No, my mother, when she spring housecleaned, spring housecleaned; and there was nothing casual in her touch.

On that morning, chosen by moon signs for its promise of "warm and sunny," Mama would be up long before daylight, shaking the kitchen range down, grinding her coffee, putting on the bacon and eggs. Then, breakfast over, we would hurry out to do the milking, strain the milk, slop the hogs, feed the chickens, and start carrying in, by way of three-gallon buckets, a barrel of water from the spring. Then a fire would be built at the wash place and two 20-gallon kettles of water put on to boil.

By then the sun would be up, the yard grass drying, and the fire going out in the kitchen range. When the stove cooled sufficiently, with G. D. helping, we would pick it up and, with great labor and puffing, carry it out into the yard. This done, it was time for G. D. to go off to his manwork, though sometimes, as a boon to Mama's intentions, he would hire a sturdy neighbor woman who would come across the field at sun-up, happy to yard grass scrub it or dust it and sun it; and then, in the late evening, the inside of the house by then scrubbed and squeaky clean, to carry everything back in.

Perhaps the labor was not actually as heavy as it now seems to me, for we had only wooden furniture and Grandpa's black walnut dining table was only eight feet long—the glass parlor stove easy enough for four people to carry; and besides, the day itself gave forth air of singular flurry and excitement, of new beginnings and hot soapsuds and cleansing sun.

The first thing Mama would do was to get the parlor stove out and stored for the summer in the smokehouse. Then she would take a hammer and screwdriver and start her attack in the windows—the small-paned cordless variety—for they must be removed, their casing strips coming down with them; then all the windows lagged out carefully into the doorway and leaned up against the plank fence to receive their ablutions of warm water and homemade soap.

This great out-going would include, of course, all the old-fashioned beds, with their slats, springs, featherticks and straw ticks—a mass of wood, metal and striped ticking that would be scattered in a confused tangle all across the front yard.

Then a second round began with buckets of hot water from the boiling kettle and buckets of clean cold water for the rinse. And, of course, into the hot water Mama would put handfuls of her soft homemade soap, that brownropy substance that she and Granny—in its own season—had made from hog grease and ash lye. This soft soap, along with its peculiar clean stink, was the very center of cleaning day and the very cleaning process itself—the bedsteads to be washed with it and the windows and even the inside of the dresser drawers—so that now its strange brown smell comes back to me, but it is not the scent of cinnamon rose. Instead, it is a wild, brown, acid, slightly chemical smell, with a taint of rancid hog grease in it and with that sweet fragrance of childhood memory, soapsuds and joy and springtime sun. And a world away from "ring around the roses" now, when we were busily cleaning out the kitchen stove and sweeping with a wooden scrub and an old feather duster; when's collection of soap bubbles dangerously close to the clothesline and the old dog barking his excitement; the clothes flagging merrily on the line.

The hired woman, left alone in the house, would be scrubbing the wide-board floors, dusting the walls and ceilings with a rag-covered broom, and washing the painted woodwork with sheets of brown soap.

Elizabeth and I might be assigned to "red up" the dresser drawers, wash the means of kitchen utensils, and wipe off G. D.'s multiplying tribe of books. As we cleaned the drawers, there was one drawer we must never open. It was the right-hand upper drawer of Grandpa's black walnut highboy—the drawer that was never opened except by the Head of the House. That was G. D., and G. D. was to town or far off in the field someplace.

We knew Grandpa as the Captain, from his Civil War service, so the drawer was never opened because it was "the Captain's drawer," though by 1920—say 1920 was the year after this specific cleaning—the Captain had been dead for many years. But his drawer was never opened; and not opened now and either, except by the oldest member—because it is in the Captain's drawer. So, back then Elizabeth and I would the lower part of the highboy and then start washing the endle dishes and endless pots and pans.

By now—getting on toward noon—Ward would be filling the straw ticks with the new straw from the straw tick, and Mama would sew them up with a darning needle and twine thread. Then the old straw was thrown into the hog pen and the soaping and scrubbing would go on.

Granny, meanwhile, for she was always on her own individual edge of the activity, would be going over the bedsprings and all the beds, cracks and crannies, going over them in that ancient routine of the mountains, with a turkey feather dipped in turpentine. For turpentine is death on bedbugs, and Granny was always certain that ou down the carpet, labored manfully to get the window strips back in place. And all of us kids running back and forth for loads of old coats, kitchen equipment, shirts and neckties, leather volumes of Charles Dickens, chamber pots, bed ticks, spice boxes—and G. D. pounding the kitchen stovepipe into its black, ill-fitting hole.

By four o'clock the house was furnished, though the spice boxes were under the bed and the empty straw ticks stuffed into the closet, the beds looked a little low, of course, and the curtains wrinkled; but the fire was flickering in the kitchen stove, and Mama was out in the big yard, ready to direct us as we ran the doomed chickens down. She selected three fairly young red roosters and set us on the trail. Around and around the big yard we pursued the first one, the rooster, his head up like a plumed Indian, running with his legs high and squawking wildly and doubling out and in. Round and round the yard and then round and round the chicken house; and the dog with his death howl, and Mama flapping her apron on the turns.

But finally he was cornered, then his two wild brothers with him; and all three carried, squawking and flailing, to the chopping block, where Mama dispatched them, in turn, with one practiced flash of the ax; then popped them into a scalding kettle; jerked their feathers off in big handfuls; and—lighting a copy of the Toledo Blade—singed them with the flaming headlines; and then rushed, her eyes cold and her apron bloody, into the kitchen to gut them, cut them, and pop them into the pot.

At 6:30, while G. D. and State Superintendent Shawkey sat in the parlor talking, Mama was setting down in front of G. D.'s plate at the dining table a great platter of golden-brown fried chicken; then adding her dishes of creamy mashed potatoes, gravy, canned green beans, spiced peaches, pickles, and hot biscuits, and warm blackberry pie. As she moved around the table in her clean starched apron, she seemed—except for the strange gleam in her gentle blue eyes—as quiet as a rose.

Then she went in and invited the two to supper, apologizing for her biscuits as they sat down. When we were all pulled up to the table, and our starched napkins unfolded, G. D. cleared his throat and asked Superintendent Shawkey to say grace.

"Thank you for the blessings of this day; bless this food to our use..." And Mama sitting there with her hands folded and her head bent devoutly in prayer. For, as she used to say, "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," and "Many hands make light work."

beds had been colonized by the little, red, bloodsucking bugs. The bedbug argument was one of the many sources of friction between Granny and Mama, for Mama insisted that there were no bedbugs, while Granny insisted that there were whole settlements of them and would spend half a day with her oily feather, going in and out of all the cracks and crannies in her old pioneer routine. Next she would slosh the bedsteads with buckets of soapy water; and then get her a big stick and start beating and flailing at the rugs.

The rugs, with one exception, Mama's 9-by-12 from the floor of the parlor, were not rugs, actually, but home-woven cotton carpets, the ones that Lydie Allen, up on Dry Crick, wove on her great clacking loom. None of the women of our house could weave carpets now—the old skills passing slowly and silently—but Lydie Allen could still weave, and also Grandma Susan and Cousin Mahalie, though Lydie did most of the neighborhood carpets now.

So Mama, when new carpet was needed, would cut carpet rags in the winter, cutting their long strips from pieces of worn-out clothing, then sewing the strips together, and winding them into great basketball-sized balls. Then she would carry the great soft multicolored balls up the crick to Lydie, and when the carpet was woven, would nail it down on the floor with carpet tacks, the old square-topped kind.

These carpet tacks, though only around the carpet edges, could wreak havoc on a child's bare feet, and turpentine would have to be poured down into the little puncture holes. Then, too, this carpet would become, during a long year's season, a great catch-all for dust and dirt. And though Mama all year, on her day of Saturday cleaning, would sprinkle salt and water on the carpet and sweep up the yellow, dirty salt, still the carpet was a dusty catch-all, and on spring cleaning day must be taken up from the floor, drug out into the yard, then beaten and turned over, and beaten again with all of Granny's fury; while the dust rose from it in yellow fogs; and the dog barked; and the chickens ran and cackled; and the wham-wham of Granny's beating stick echoed against the smokehouse wall.

cows still to be milked, the eggs still to be gathered, but Mama would glance around the dining room with a look of weary satisfaction. For though the ceiling still leaked, and the old wallpaper still hung in bubbles, the room was full of soap and sweetness. Then one time, I remember Mama going into the Captain's room in the twilight and setting up in the very middle of the table a bunch of pink flowers in her pretty glass dish. And all the room smelled of sweet flowers and brown soap and sunlight; and I can smell it now, and the harsh old brown soap smell makes the tears sting in my eyes.

The empty scrubbed rooms of the house would seem, at this juncture, very big and silent, with all their people gone. I would walk through the echoing rooms, smelling the sun and soap, and then, staring into the corners, would sense the presence of the old Captain as he had worked, pounding and sawing here in the old summers—just back from Yankee prison, so many years ago.

But Mama would call me from my wanderings. It was time to carry in the furniture, to reinstall the windows, and hang the clean curtains on their wooden rods. So our dragging and puffing would begin all over. Then Mama would take—as all women must take—a spell of rearranging the furniture, a fit which would double the burden and require the transfer of dressers, tables, and what-nots of various kind. But the Captain's black walnut highboy would always be put back into its exact old place against the wall; and the carved handle of its upper right-hand drawer would stare out at me, saying, "Do Not Touch. I am the Captain's Drawer."

After Mama's shifting and staring were over, we would carry the gear back into the kitchen—the stove still absent—and rearrange the cupboard shelves. Then the beds must be put together; their side pieces knocked into their places with a hammer; and the slats laid on, the springs, the straw tick, then the feather tick—in that order; and then the beds made up for the night, and the shining windows reinstalled with nails and hammer, and the sweet-smelling curtains hung.

Then, by late supper time, G. D. would come to help carry the range back into the kitchen and—after an immortal struggle—manage to get the stovepipe into its hole.

The rugs, with one exception, Mama's 9-by-12 from the floor of the parlor, were not rugs, actually, but home-woven cotton carpets, the ones that Lydie Allen, up on Dry Crick, wove on her great clacking loom. None of the women of our house could weave carpets now—the old skills passing slowly and silently—but Lydie Allen could still weave, and also Grandma Susan and Cousin Mahalie, though Lydie did most of the neighborhood carpets now.

So Mama, when new carpet was needed, would cut carpet rags in the winter, cutting their long strips from pieces of worn-out clothing, then sewing the strips together, and winding them into great basketball-sized balls. Then she would carry the great soft multicolored balls up the crick to Lydie, and when the carpet was woven, would nail it down on the floor with carpet tacks, the old square-topped kind.

These carpet tacks, though only around the carpet edges, could wreak havoc on a child's bare feet, and turpentine would have to be poured down into the little puncture holes. Then, too, this carpet would become, during a long year's season, a great catch-all for dust and dirt. And though Mama all year, on her day of Saturday cleaning, would sprinkle salt and water on the carpet and sweep up the yellow, dirty salt, still the carpet was a dusty catch-all, and on spring cleaning day must be taken up from the floor, drug out into the yard, then beaten and turned over, and beaten again with all of Granny's fury; while the dust rose from it in yellow fogs; and the dog barked; and the chickens ran and cackled; and the wham-wham of Granny's beating stick echoed against the smokehouse wall.

At noontime we would hurriedly eat the cold lunch Mama had prepared for the occasion and then hurry back to the conflict. The window curtains must be washed and stretched, the wearing clothes carried back into the house to their pegs and to our one closet, so that the scatter rugs could be put on the clothesline and beaten with paddles and sticks.

By now the hired woman would have the inside of the house all clean and soap-smelling, and we could begin to carry in our gear. The heavy old carpet came first, and we would drag it heavily and pull it into place. Then Mama and Ward, crawling on their knees, would attempt to stretch it and tack it down thus to cover up for

The empty scrubbed rooms of the house would seem, at this juncture, very big and silent, with all their people gone. I would walk through the echoing rooms, smelling the sun and soap, and then, staring into the corners, would sense the presence of the old Captain as he had worked, pounding and sawing here in the old summers—just back from Yankee prison, so many years ago.

But Mama would call me from my wanderings. It was time to carry in the furniture, to reinstall the windows, and hang the clean curtains on their wooden rods. So our dragging and puffing would begin all over. Then Mama would take—as all women must take—a spell of rearranging the furniture, a fit which would double the burden and require the transfer of dressers, tables, and what-nots of various kind. But the Captain's black walnut highboy would always be put back into its exact old place against the wall; and the carved handle of its upper right-hand drawer would stare out at me, saying, "Do Not Touch. I am the Captain's Drawer."

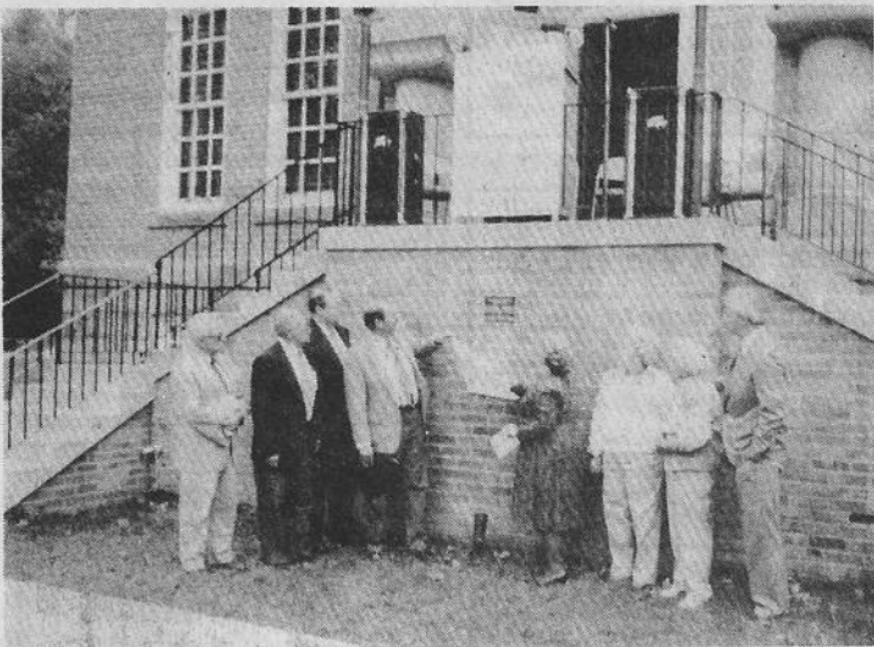

After Mama's shifting and staring were over, we would carry the gear back into the kitchen—the stove still absent—and rearrange the cupboard shelves. Then, by late supper time, G. D. would come to help carry the range back into the kitchen and—after an immortal struggle—manage to get the stovepipe into its hole.

But all of Mama's housecleanings did not go as smooth and sunny as this one typical day. One time a sudden rainstorm swooped down on us from Bridger's Mountain, with Mama running to gather up G. D.'s books, yelling at us to "get in the feather ticks" and the rain inundating a great scattering of our household effects.

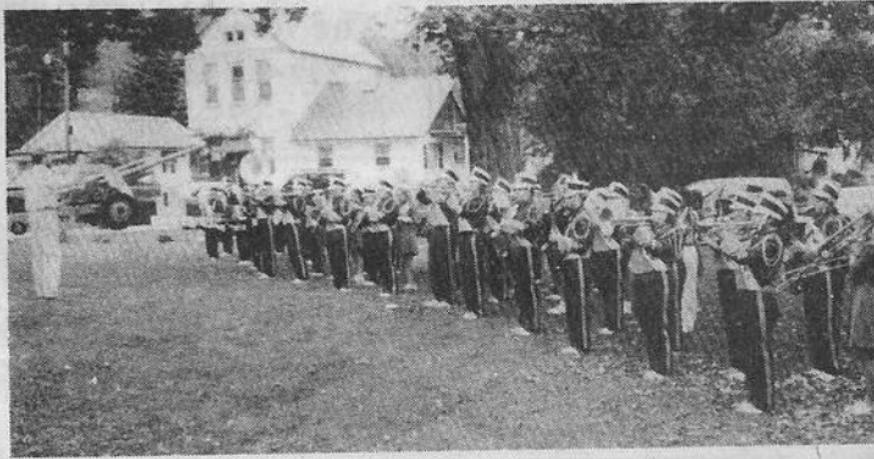

Then that other and historic day when G. D. arrived at late noon hour to announce calmly that State School Superintendent Maurice P. Shawkey was arriving for a fried chicken supper at half-past six. It was this day that G. D. helped us carry in the furniture, helped nail

Courthouse marks 100th year

Climaxing a centennial celebration and ceremony held October 3 on the Court House lawn in Marlinton was the unveiling of a plaque designating placement of the Court House and Jail on the National Register of Historic Places. The Court House is the 12th entry from Pocahontas County on the Register.

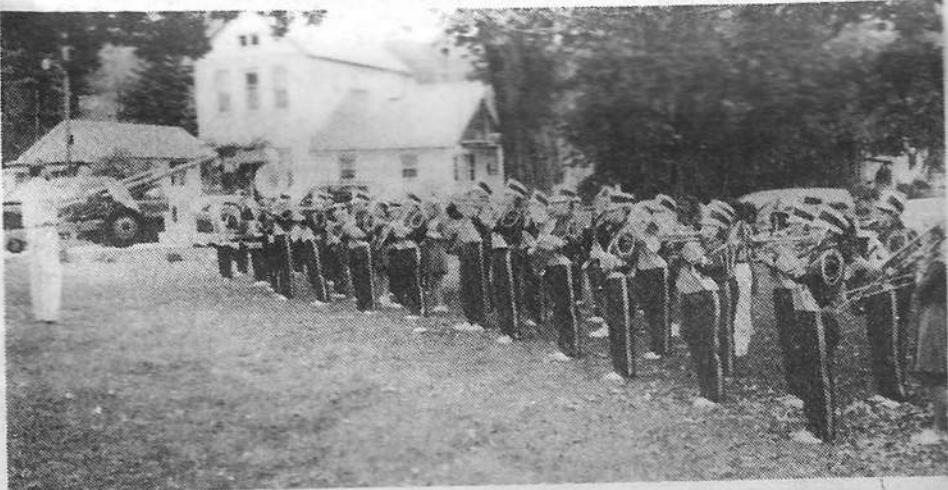

The three to four hundred persons in attendance enjoyed musical selections provided by the Pocahontas County High School Warrior Band under the direction of Ron Hall.

Ruth Morgan, Chairperson of the Pocahontas Historic Landmarks Commission, welcomed the fellow members of the Commission as well as past members who were present. Mr. Moyers' message was followed by the unveiling of the National Register of Historic Places Plaque. Closing remarks were made by Mrs. Morgan.

Autumn colors decorated the tables from which the 100th Anniversary Cake, baked by Jean McClure, was served to the guests along with punch made by Betty Jo Vydra.

Anthony L. Vydra, HLC member, was chairperson of the affair, assisting Pocahontas County Commissioners, Mr. Moyers, Norman Lee Alderman and Mike Mynuk and members of the HLC.

Highlighting the program was a most interesting and informative talk by Jessie Beard Powell on the "History of the Pocahontas County Court House" with many anecdotes about the times and people one hundred years ago.

Following the history and a musical selection, Dana Moyers, President of the County Commission, delivered a short message. He also presented his

Sharp's Store Offers Look at 'Great Long Ago'

By Pamela Pritt

When you could buy backs for suspenders for 15¢ and boots for $1.45, two pounds of coffee for 50¢ and five pounds of sugar for 30¢, L. D. Sharp opened a one-room store along the old Seneca Trail near Slaty Fork.

Luther David Sharp was all of 20 years old when he became the legendary first owner of the establishment which has toted over a century of merchandise, history and family along its walls, on its floors and behind its counters.

In 1927, Sharp moved the store nearer to the newly opened U. S. 219, the biggest change in the store's 112 year history.

The most recent change came last month when John and Robin Friel became the new operators, taking over from L. D. Sharp's granddaughter, Linda Eduardo.

Three steps up from the creaking hardwood floor and behind a time-worn, colossal cash register and an ancient set of scales to match, John Friel now sits at the same oak desk where L. D. Sharp entered figures in the store's original ledgers, which are now on display.

Beth Gragg and Ernestine Hannah are the Friels' capable assistants. Gragg and Hannah both worked at Sharp's Country Store for the Eduardos. "They're part of the original crew," John said. "They've really helped with the transition."

On a late August day, the Friels serve up big deli sandwiches, hefty ice cream cones and trendy cold drinks and sodas to a bevy of customers who don't just stop for refreshment, but for a look around.

They have escaped the world of convenience stores and fluorescent lights and taken a step back in time to a real old-fashioned country mercantile whose bare light bulbs are controlled by pull-chains.

And it is as if they know that they have discovered something unique and desirable in their fast-paced lives. They have encountered the gentle, indolent past and are caught.

Some of them sit wistfully on the benches outside the store and view the myriad of old tools, pictures, and taxidermy display from days gone by. "It has the appearance of being a quiet, lazy little country store, but I have to keep hopping, just to keep up," John Friel allowed.

Which means the customers get to relax; the Friels' don't.

Inside the store, a golden eagle, wings unfurled, keeps watch over the merchandise and the Friels. It was killed near Durbin in 1909 and just as a reminder, the sign beneath says that killing the endangered bird now is a crime.

Modern coolers with sodas, iced teas, lemonades, and spring waters sit directly across the aisle from a collection of bottles of their antique counterparts. Wooden boxes marked "Prunes" and "Dynamite," respectively, and an enamel chamber pot are on a shelf overtowp the groceries.

"If my dad were to walk in the store today, he'd recognize it immediately," said Dave Sharp, who also had his turn behind the oak and glass counters in the 30s and 40s. "It's mostly as it was then. Everything is about the same."

Sharp is still the proprietor of the store and at 80, active in its day-to-day management, always with an eye on the future of the business. He looks forward to the new working relationship with his nephew and family. "They will provide the same service to the community," he said. "We look forward to Sharp's Country Store's share in Pocahontas County's growth into the next century."

The last century seems closer than the next at the store where a World War I helmet and a top hat are displayed as prominently as the Sharp's Country Store caps for sale on a countertop.

Lucky visitors get to listen to an original Edison gramophone playing the train song "The 5:15." The tinny, static tenor voice liltts the tune recorded on Edison's Gold Moulded Records May 1, 1905.

The Friels seem more than ready to shoulder the responsibility of the store's place in history and the present. "We have new surprises every week," John said. "I've been here a month and I don't believe I've seen everything yet."

If the Friels have missed something, "The Lady" probably has not. She is a 68-year-old (she looks younger) mannequin clad in a sequined dress and hat. The Friels' daughter, Jessica, is timid around her and lots of customers speak to her before they realize she is only a sentinel of bygone days, a welcoming sign that a little bit of reality can be left at the door.

The store displays a memento from nearly every decade in its history. From the 1890s camera to the 1960s Lone Ranger lunch box, a parade of the evolution of radios, the area's first telephone and a table lamp with pom-pom fringe from the 70s, Sharp's Country Store is worth the time it takes to drive over Elk Mountain, stop in and take a look at the great long ago.

Drennen Ridge Man Likes The Grind, Offers Recipe

Otis Waugh, of Drennen Ridge, has been grinding meal, feed and flour for himself and others for years.

His father operated the grist mill at Campbelltown for 29 years, and during those three decades, Waugh learned many tricks of the trade from his father, like fattening the family hogs on the corn used to clean buckwheat hulls from the ears.

Waugh says the Campbelltown mill opened in 1899, and in those early days, it ran 24 hours a day. But the convenience of store-bought flour and bread, and a lack of water in Stony Creek were coffin nails in the miller's ancient trade. Waugh's father, and the mill, retired in 1956.

These days, the water-driven mill that his father owned has been relocated to Babcock State Park. But Waugh still uses a much smaller, motorized burr to grind corn for himself and a few friends and neighbors.

Using a small tractor to drive the burr, Waugh is able to grind about a bushel of corn an hour, a significantly smaller output than the old mill at Campbelltown. Still, it's enough to meet his needs these days.

Otis Waugh claims to be "not much of a cook." However, he did provide the following recipe and claimed that, if the directions were followed, this old-fashioned pone would rise up, "big as a cake."

Sweetened Corn Pone
by Otis Waugh

4 cups cornmeal, burr ground
1 tsp. salt
1/2 cup sugar
4 cups very hot water

Mix until smooth—let stand overnight in a tightly covered container.

Remember, after mixture has stood you will know if it's ready to continue to the next step by its bubbly appearance and its sour, rather unpleasant odor.

The following morning, add:

1/2 cup molasses
1 egg
1 1/2 cups flour
1 1/2 tsp. soda
2 tsp. baking powder
1 cup buttermilk

Mix in bowl until smooth. Bake in 450° over for 15 minutes. Reduce heat to 350° and bake for 45 minutes more or until brown.

Remember to use a molasses that is mild in flavor, a light amber color. Beware of strong molasses.

Use home grown meal locally grown by burr stone. "Store bought" prepared cornmeal will not give the same results.

Dr. Harvey Winters McNeil is at the right in this photograph. The man on the left is not identified.

Times Have Changed in Payment for Medical Services

David McNeil, of Boston, Massachusetts, had a short article in The New England Journal of Medicine concerning his grandfather, Dr. H. W. McNeil, as follows:

The man in the photograph is my grandfather, Harvey Winters McNeil, who received his medical degree from the University of Virginia in 1897 and afterward established a general practice in his birthplace, Hillsboro, West Virginia. He was one of the few doctors in the county then, and his practice covered more than 100 square miles of the surrounding countryside, most of it mountainous wilderness. Bad weather and worse roads often made patients accessible only by horseback. The saddlebags in which he carried his medical gear on such visits can be seen slung over his shoulder in the photograph.

Figure 2 shows a page from Dr. McNeil's ledger for the years 1902, 1903, and 1904 with the accounts of two of his patients. It shows that his fee for a house call, including medication, was typically $2. But not all his patients paid in cash. Frank Scott settled a portion of his account with 10 bushels of corn, which my grandfather, who had a farm on the side, probably used to feed his hogs. J. V. Slaven paid some of his account, according to the ledger, with a "Day's work," after which appears the word "Flues," presumably meaning that he cleaned the chimneys in my grandfather's house.

Dr. McNeil died in 1948.

The corn is given a value of $6.50 against Mr. Scott's account. Mr. Slaven is credited with $1.50 for the work on the flues.

Make Coffey.

McNeels Agricultural Achievement winners

The State Fair of West Virginia and the West Virginia Farm Bureau have announced the winner of the 1999 Agricultural Achievement Award for Heritage Farming is the McNeel family of Hillsboro, in Pocahontas County.

J. Moffett and Elma C. McNeel were honored as being a West Virginia farm family that has maintained their rural and agricultural lifestyle over the years, has been involved in the community, acts as role models, and consistently dedicates time to efficient agricultural production and the upkeep of their farm. For 80 years the McNeel family has owned and worked their 740 acre farm. Today two generations of the family are raising cattle, chickens, pigs, sheep, and crops of hay, straw, wheat, corn for grain, corn for insilage, oats, and clover seed.

Both McNeels are active in agricultural associations and in the community. In describing what a rural lifestyle means to them, Elma says, "After we have been away for a few days the farm looks so good to be back to. There is always plenty of work but also a freer lifestyle. What better place to rear four sons and now have them bring their children back to the farm for weekends or all summer?"

Governor Cecil Underwood and Gus Douglass, Commissioner of Agriculture, presented the award during a ceremony on August 19 at the fairgrounds.

Beard awarded new trial

Jacob Beard walked into a Greenbrier County courtroom under guard and shackled Friday. But if he can make the $150,000 bond set by Circuit Judge Charles Lobban Friday, he could be, at least temporarily, a free man until his retrial for the 1980 Rainbow Murders.

After nearly six years in prison and extensive contentions of his innocence, Beard may stand trial again for those murders. Ruling on Friday, Lobban granted Beard's motion for a new trial, vacating the results of the three-week 1993 trial in which Beard was found guilty of the two killings.

Beard, 52, was convicted for the double homicides of Nancy Santomero, 19, of Huntington, Long Island, New York, and Vicki Durian, 26, of Wellman, Iowa.

Durian and Santomero were apparently traveling to an annual gathering of the Rainbow Family, a loosely-knit counterculture group meeting that year on the Monongahela National Forest.

Beard initially asked for the new trial based upon the on-again-off-again confessions of convicted serial killer Joseph Paul Franklin.

But it was not Franklin's latest offering, an October, 1997, deposition given to Prosecuting Attorney Walt Weiford and defense attorney Brandy Simms, that tipped the scales of justice in Beard's favor.

Instead, it was an affidavit filed by Arnold Cutlip saying that he was with state's eyewitness Johnny Washington Lewis all day on June 25, 1980, and neither of them saw Beard, that apparently compelled Lobban to grant the motion for a new trial.

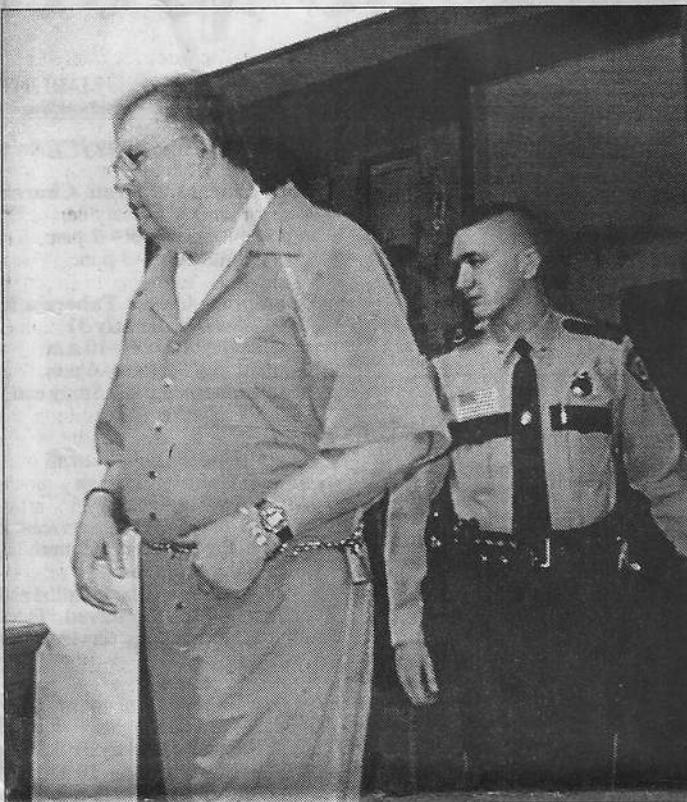

They were apparently traveling to an annual gathering of the Rainbow Family, a loosely-knit counterculture group meeting that year on the Monongahela National Forest.

Although Lobban awarded the new trial based on the information given by Cutlip, he did not cede veracity to either Beard's former co-defendant or to Franklin.

"(Franklin)'s credibility is questionable. Arnie Cutlip's credibility is questionable," Lobban said.

"The problem is the court believes there were reasons why Joseph Paul Franklin and Arnie Cutlip didn't testify and that it's newly discovered evidence since the trial."

Franklin refused to cooperate with West Virginia authorities after his initial confession to the murders in 1984. He again refused to speak with both law enforcement authorities and defense attorney Stephen Farmer in 1993. Franklin, an avowed racist, claims he committed the murders because one of the women admitted she'd had sexual relations with blacks.

JACOB BEARD ENTERS the court room Friday in shackles, perhaps for the last time.

He also confessed to the crimes to Cincinnati, Ohio, television reporter Deborah Dixon in 1996. During that interview he said he was concerned that someone in West Virginia was incarcerated for a murder he had committed. "That's my motivation. I don't want to see an innocent man get locked up for something he didn't do," Franklin said.

Dixon has since been an apparent crusader for Beard's freedom. She was herself interviewed in December by a columnist in the Cincinnati Enquirer about the Rainbow Murders.

"There's no question in my mind that Jacob Beard is the wrong guy," Dixon is quoted as saying. "When Jacob Beard walks out of prison, then I'll celebrate. Then I'll take congratulations."

Lobban noted that Cutlip, although under indictment himself for the murders in 1993, could have testified at Beard's trial since nothing the man said in his affidavit was self-incriminating.

"I found it hard to believe all the other co-defendants didn't parade down here to say (they weren't) there," Lobban said.

After Beard's conviction, charges were dropped against his co-defendants, Richard Fowler, Bill McCoy, who was incarcerated in Nevada at the time of the arrests, Gerald Brown, who died shortly before the trial, and Cutlip.

Farmer argued Friday that Cutlip's indictment was a maneuver by Weiford to keep the man from testifying to Beard's innocence. "He knew it would be exculpatory to Mr. Beard," Farmer said.

Weiford dismissed that theory saying that Cutlip's indictment was "not strategic."

"The grand jury indicted Arnie Cutlip," Weiford said. "(He) might have invoked the fifth amendment whether he'd been charged or not."

Weiford said charges were dropped against Cutlip and the other co-defendants because the statute of limitations had run out on the only remaining charge—accessory to murder after the fact.

"Arnie Cutlip is perhaps not guilty of any offense at all," Weiford said.

Ironically, Cutlip spent approximately seven months in the Pocahontas County Jail in 1982 on a statement by Beard about another alleged murder.

Beard told investigators in February, of that year, that Cutlip and Paulmer "Buddy" Adkison had brought the body of a dead woman to his farm in September 1982 and asked that he put it through a cornchopper.

Cutlip was released after investigators could find neither remains of a body nor a missing person fit the description Beard gave.

Beard told investigators a woman was a "third (Rainbow) girl."

Based on that statement, the woman was given immunity in the Rainbow Case by then-Pocahontas County Prosecutor J. Steven Farmer.

Weiford called Farmer's actions against the state "misguided."

The prosecutor said Cutlip's affidavit totally or wholly discredit Lewis's testimony, is not allowable under the rules.

However, Lobban ruled according to precedent, the rule allowed a new trial under specific circumstances, if the new evidence goes to an alibi defense.

Beard's defense was based on his testimony that he was at a Pocahontas County Board of Education meeting and not on the Knob.

However, under that rule, new evidence must also be likely to produce a different result at trial.

"It's been a long six years," Beard said Friday. "I just hope the new trial will give me the opportunity to tell the truth out."

Lobban cautioned Beard to be careful with his statements and that his bond be revoked and a warrant issued if his arrest should he try to contact a state's witness.

Weiford can appeal Lobban's decision and said Friday he will do so if he thinks there is a good chance of success.

Weiford also has to decide if the state has a reasonable chance of convicting Beard before he decides to take the case back before the trial. "Do I have a case I can win beyond a reasonable doubt?" Weiford commented Tuesday. "With the involvement of Franklin, that's different today," he said. "I have to prove one of (Beard) guilty beyond a reasonable doubt and one guy (Franklin) innocent beyond a reasonable doubt on the face of a confession."

Review of the evidence and checking on the availability of witnesses from the 1993 trial has already begun, according to Weiford. He said former Police Sergeant Robert Alkire has been employed as an investigator for his office on the Rainbow Murders. Sgt. Alkire has been involved in the investigation of the murders since they occurred in 1980.

As of Tuesday afternoon, Beard had not been posted for trial.

Ironically, Cutlip spent approximately seven months in the Pocahontas County Jail in 1982 on a statement by Beard about another alleged murder.

Beard told investigators in February, of that year, that Cutlip brought the body of a dead woman to his farm in September 1980, and asked that he put it through a cornchopper.

Cutlip was released after investigators could find neither remains of a body nor a missing person to fit the description Beard gave them.

Beard told investigators the woman was a "third (Rainbow) girl."

Based on that statement Beard was given immunity in the Rainbow Case by then-Pocahontas County Prosecutor J. Steven Hunt er.

Weiford called Farmer's allegations against the state "misguided."

The prosecutor said Cutlip's affidavit totally or wholly goes to discredit Lewis's testimony, which is not allowable under the rules.

However, Lobban ruled that, according to precedent, the rules allowed a new trial under special circumstances, if the new evidence goes to an alibi defense.

Weiford's defense was based on his testimony that he was at a Pocahontas County Board of Education meeting and not on Briery Knob.

However, under that rule, the new evidence must also be likely to produce a different result at trial.

"It's been a long six years," Beard said Friday. "I just hope this will give me the opportunity to get the truth out."

Lobban cautioned Beard that he is to have no contact with state's witnesses and that his bond would be revoked and a warrant issued for his arrest should he try to contact a state's witness.

Weiford can appeal Lobban's decision and said Friday he would do so if he thinks there is a likelihood of success.

Weiford also has to decide if the state has a reasonable chance of convicting Beard before he decides to take the case back before a jury. "Do I have a case I can prove beyond a reasonable doubt," Weiford commented Tuesday. With the involvement of Franklin "the case is different today," he said, "It is two cases. I have to prove one guy (Beard) guilty beyond a reasonable doubt and one guy (Franklin) innocent beyond a reasonable doubt, in the face of a confession."

Review of the evidence and checking on the availability of the witnesses from the 1993 trial has already begun, according to the Prosecutor. He said former State Police Sergeant Robert Alkire has been employed as an investigator for his office on the Rainbow case. Sgt. Alkire has been involved in the investigation of the murders since they occurred in 1980.

As of Tuesday afternoon bail had not been posted for Beard.

Herbert E. Ellingwood

Herbert Eugene Ellingwood, 67, of Reno, Nevada, died on March 8, 1998.

He was born on March 5, 1931, in Ordway, Colorado, the son of Harry and Edith Ellingwood. He grew up in Watsonville, California, and attended Yale University. He was a graduate of the Stanford University Law School.

George Lawless THE GAZETTEER

ONE delegate doesn't rise during the ceremonials at House of Delegates sessions. But Del. Thomas C. Edgar (D-Pocahontas) stands tall in the hearts of his constituents.

Edgar is a double-amputee, arrives at his desk each day in a folding wheelchair. The Hillsboro first-terminer is accompanied by his pretty wife, Betsy. The Edgars modestly describe themselves as "farmers," but neither fits the prototype.

The firm-jawed legislator admits he's a newcomer to politics, but he is not unaware of its worldwide implications. As an ar-

Lawless

"OUR ordnance man later told me he had disarmed the shell, found that it'd clipped a window bar on the way in and fouled the fuse," Edgar said. "If it hadn't all of us would have been goners. Man, I sure was lucky."

THERE'S another double-amputee in the House. But Del. Roy Swanigan (D-Fayette) is so adroit on his artificial legs that few colleagues suspect it. Swanigan lost both legs in a mining accident in 1946.

But in 1955 he got interested in flying, entered a partnership to buy a plane. Today he is possibly the only double-amputee who is a licensed pilot in the U. S.

"Maybe Tom and I should start some sort of a club up here," Swanigan joked.

He recalled a favorite story about former Gov. Okey L. Patteson, who also lost both legs in a hunting accident.

Patteson was running for sheriff in Fayette County, tillery captain during the Battle of the Bulge, Edgar was holed up in a wrecked church at Bastogne.

On New Year's Day, 1945, he was seated talking to his radio operator when a 155mm artillery shell came in and ripped off both legs at the knees. The shell did not explode. But fearing it might have a delayed-action fuse, the captain ordered his eight operators out of the room. They hesitated. "Get out—no sense in all of us getting killed," he ordered. But the men returned moments later, carried their still conscious commander to an aid station.

Swanigan said, and he was at a big rally at which his opponent was to appear. Both men were to make speeches. Patteson's opponent got up first, and started telling the folks about what a tough job a sheriff had, how physically demanding it was.

"Why, the man you elect will have to chase up and down these hills after criminals . . . you need a sheriff who can do that . . ." the speaker said.

When his turn to speak came, Patteson arose and said, succinctly: "What we need in this job is somebody with a head, not legs . . ."

The crowd loved it. And they proved it at the polls.

NOW there are two Christians in the House. Last year we noted there was only one "Christian" in that august body.

But newcomer Jack L. Christian (D-McDowell) joined third-terminer Clarence C. Christian Jr. (D-Mercer) this session.

IT MIGHT be a good idea if the arrangements committee for Gov. Barron's inaugural ceremonies leaves that barrier up around the second-floor rotunda well.

During the first legislative week, the rope fence prevented lawmakers, lobbyists and spectators from depositing soggy coffee cups, cigar butts, etc.

Excerpts from Marlinton Chapter from Faith, Fight, and Fun
by Joseph Herbert Bean,
The personal story of a Methodist Preacher in the early 1900's
MARLINTON, 1912-1916

That "There is no 'G' in Marlinton" was a fact I soon learned after I reached that county seat of Pocahontas County, West Virginia. I find that even as fine an authority as the New Standard Dictionary limps in this regard. I was informed soon after reaching Marlinton that the town was named for an old hunter whose home was in that fertile spot where Knapp's Creek flows into the Greenbrier River, who was the inventor of the Marlin repeating rifle. I cannot vouch for the absolute accuracy of the above statement, nor for the further bit of information that some draftsman made an error—which is by no means unusual for fallible man—in writing in the names of the two adjoining counties Greenbrier and Pocahontas. (Ed. Note: Alleghany and Pocahontas) Look at the map and form your own opinion. I am ready to admit that too much so-called history is the child of error.

About three months before we were transferred from Belmont to Marlinton our seventh child was born, never dreaming that we would be sent out of the state of Virginia. We named this baby girl Virginia, for my youngest sister, I am sure. Shortly after coming to Belmont church our sixth child, a girl also, had been born and named Katharine for my middle sister better known as Anna.

Just before we left for Marlinton some friends were calling. One of them turned to little four-year-old Katharine and said: "What is your baby sister's name?" You can easily understand the occasion of Katharine's delightful error and the amusement that gripped us all when she replied, "West Virginia."

Our trip to Marlinton was one entirely by train—except at transfer points which were otherwise. From Roanoke to Buchanan—to the C. and O. road across the James river—to Eagle Rock for a short visit with Mrs. Bean's people, and on to Clifton Forge. We changed to the main line of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway from the same station, changed cars at Ronceverte via the Greenbrier branch of the C.&O. to Marlinton. We expected we would not find one soul previously known. "All off for Marlinton!" A preacher and his wife, four daughters and three sons, what a bunch of Beans! "How are you, Jimmy? We are glad to have you and your family!" How gladly did I hear that Blacksburg name, given me by my intimate schoolmates, from the lips of a classmate in those memoried old years at V.A. & M. College, "C. J." Richardson.

One of my most intimate friends at Blacksburg, our lives had drifted apart, and here we were together again: he, perhaps, the most influential man in Marlinton; the proprietor of a large hardware establishment in the center of the lumber industry in West Virginia. At that time the mills in Pocahontas County were by conservative estimate, if not by actual count, sawing one million feet of lumber each day. The largest bandsawmill was at Cass, about 25 miles north of Marlinton, owned and operated by the West Virginia Pulp and Paper Mill Corporation, and cutting one hundred and fifty thousand feet of lumber per day.

What a happy combination of circumstances greeted me at Marlinton. A friend of college days, now a man of outstanding business success, a Steward in the church, respected and honored by the whole town and surrounding communities, and I his pastor, with a business experience and part of those years in the hardware business. It looked then as if God had gone before me and today I have a clear picture of it all. A picture which was four years in the painting, and hangs on the walls of memory. We spent four good and gracious years at Marlinton. "C.J." and I found our friendship of earlier years a thing worthy of renewal and growth and use to the glory of God—and to me a fortunate avenue to the hearts of the church and town.

I followed Dr. A. M. Cackley, a white-haired saint who died about a year after leaving Marlinton. We were soon comfortably settled in the parsonage and found a most delightful hospitality in the church membership and withal in the whole town.

The first year, as usual with me when sent to a new charge, was spent in getting acquainted with the church membership and the church program, needs and opportunity. A church without a program is like a ship without chart and compass. A preacher in charge without an adequate program thoroughly formulated through mental acumen and meditative digestion thereof, into which initiation and spiritual daring on his part have been put, is like a bareback rider without bridle reins astride a horse of unknown character: he may be borne safely to the barn where rest and hay abound or he may find himself on a wild bronco. The tapestry of the program of any church will be deftly wrought of the threads of reality as discovered lying about in individuals, cultural levels present attainment, opportunity and vision, which can be awarded in purpose and spiritual push engendered by the bringing of God and man into the weaving of the will of God, into the church's program.

I am willing to agree that a church cannot remain static and long postpone death, or be vitalized by the Holy Spirit and not grow. The first year, or at times a longer period, will find any minister of the Eternal Gospel very diligent in two fields: pastoral visitation (not social visiting and by no means neglecting the unchurched) and gospel preaching through assiduous study and prayer-bound meditation, neglecting not the evangelistic appeal. I believe the gateway to productive sermonizing, or a man's whole ministry, is found in St. Paul's statement in 1 Cor. 2:2, "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified."

Farther along the roadway of your ministerial career, go with Paul in spiritual comradeship and say as did he by lip and life: "For me to live is Christ." How quickly the evening shadows of life rest down, and then to say with Paul in unhesitating faith and enforcing truth, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith" makes inevitable his further word—"henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

Our second year at Marlinton started at the highwater mark. Conference at the beginning of that, or rather at the close of the first year, met in Staunton, Virginia, March 26-31, 1913. The railroad near Lowmoor was washed away by undermining and a temporary track had been laid. When I reached home there was not only an account of the great damage done at Dayton, Ohio, but I found my family across the river temporarily housed with "C.J." Richardson's am sure. Shortly after coming to Belmont church our sixth child, a girl also, had been born and named Katherine, the middle sister better known as Anna.

Just before we left for Marlinton some friends were calling. One of them turned to little four-year-old Katherine and said: "What is your baby sister's name?" You can easily understand the occasion of Katherine's delightful error and the amusement that gripped us all when she replied, "West Virginia."

Our trip to Marlinton was one entirely by train—except a transfer point which were otherwise. From Roanoke to Buchanan—to the C. and O. road across the James river—to Eagle Rock for a short visit with Mrs. Bean's people, and on to Clifton Forge. We changed to the main line of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway from the same station, changed cars at Ronceverte via the Greenbrier branch of the C.&O. to Marlinton. We expected we would not find one soul previously known. "All off for Marlinton!" A preacher and his wife, four daughters and three sons, what a bunch of Beans! "How are you, Jimmy? We are glad to have you and your family!" How gladly did I hear that Blacksburg name, given me by my intimate schoolmates, from the lips of a classmate in those memorable old years at V.A. & W. College. "C.J." Richardson.

One of my most intimate friends at Blacksburg, our lives had drifted apart, and here we were together again he, perhaps, the most influential man in Marlinton; the proprietor of a large hardware establishment in the center of the lumber industry in West Virginia. At that time the mills in Pocahontas County were by conservative estimate, if not by actual count, sawing one million feet of lumber each day. The largest bandsawmill was at Cass, about 25 miles north of Marlinton, owned and operated by the West Virginia Pulp and Paper Mill Corporation, and cutting one hundred and fifty thousand feet of lumber per day.

What a happy combination of circumstances greeted me at Marlinton. A friend of college days, now a man of outstanding business success, a Steward in the church, respected and honored by the whole town and surrounding communities, and I his pastor, with a business experience and part of those years in the hardware business. It looked then as if God had gone before me and today I have a clear picture of it all. A picture which was four years in the painting, and hangs on the walls of memory. We spent four good and gracious years at Marlinton. "C.J." and I found our friendship of earlier years a thing worthy of renewal and growth and use to the glory of God—and to me a fortunate avenue to the hearts of the church and town.

I followed Dr. A. M. Cackley, a white-haired saint who died about a year after leaving Marlinton. We were soon comfortably settled in the parsonage and found a most delightful hospitality in the church membership and within in the whole town.

The first year, as usual with me when sent to a new charge, was spent in getting acquainted with the church membership and the church program, needs and opportunity. A church without a program is like a ship without chart and compass. A preacher in charge without an adequate program thoroughly formulated through mental acumen and meditative digestion thereof, into which initiation and spiritual daring on his part have been put, is like a bareback rider without bridle reins astride a horse of unknown character; he may be borne safely to the barn where rest and hay abound or he may find himself on a wild bronco. The tapestry of the program of any church will be deftly wrought of the threads of reality as discovered lying about in individuals, cultural levels present attainment, opportunity and vision, which can be awarded in purpose and spiritual push engendered by the bringing of God and man into the weaving of the will of God, into the church's program.

I am willing to agree that a church cannot remain static and long postpone death, or be vitalized by the Holy Spirit and not grow. The first year, or at times a longer period, will find any minister of the Eternal Gospel very diligent in two fields: pastoral visitation (not social visiting and by no means neglecting the unchurched) and gospel preaching through assiduous study and prayer-bound meditation, neglecting not the evangelistic appeal. Our second year at Marlinton started at the highwater mark. Conference at the beginning of that, or rather at the close of the first year, met in Staunton, Virginia, March 26-31, 1913. The railroad near Lowmoor was washed away by undermining and a temporary track had been laid. When I reached home there was not only an account of the great damage done at Dayton, Ohio, but I found my family across the river temporarily housed with "C.J." Richardson's family.

Knapp's Creek and the Greenbrier River had joined forces and made a lake of a good part of the town. Mrs. Bean and the children had been taken to higher ground near the river and the bridge crossing it, in a boat which was rowed over the top of the picket fence around the parsonage and the church. The water was just to the edge of the first floor of the parsonage and one or two feet over the church floor. As water washed about, I was told the boatman had fire-water within and was none too steady in his operation of the boat. What an experience that was for Mrs. B. and the children. The twin boys, then nearly 13 years old, counted it a great adventure; but for Mrs. B., with a 15 month old baby and several older children, it was rather a hard experience. God and some fine friends on earth were with the parsonage family.

We had hardly more than reached Marlinton from Belmont when news of the sinking of The Titanic, with its almost unprecedented loss of life, reached our ears and stirred our hearts. We heard as the flood receded where we lived how the pride of man, "an unsinkable ship," went down with her cargo of human freight, as gallantry and courage for the hour rose above the frost mists of Atlantic's mouthing waters. From arctic prison an iceberg had made a break for freedom's path and crossing the way of foolish pride took with her as a hostage to the deep, the Titanic with the larger part of her precious cargo: 1635 souls. What a sacrifice upon the altar of pride! In a far flung "Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning." Mt. 2:18.

The officialdom and membership of the church were rich in loyal and gracious souls, in the Richardsons, the Sydnors, the Yeagers, the Smiths, the Arbogasts, the Birds, the Marshalls, the Moores, the Brills, the Irvines, the Eskridges, the Hills, the McFerrins, the Williams, and many, many others. Several fine Baptist families worshiped with us and worked with us, as also those of other churches not represented in Marlinton. The fellowship among the denominations with churches in Marlinton was excellent—I soon came to know most of the citizens of the town.

One family of brilliant attainments, of the Presbyterian Church and of a rather unique, and certainly a bit unusual parentage, were of worthwhile acquaintance. The father was a minister of quite a few years in the pastorate. He had retired some years before I knew him and had come to be quite a marrying parson. I was told that he used a very short service, when so requested. Somewhat after this fashion. "John, wilt thou have this woman as thy wedded wife?" The answer is, "I will." "Mary, wilt thou have this man as thy wedded husband?" The answer is "I will." "Travel on, you are married."

Marlinton was quite a marrying town, and I had some unusual experiences in connection therewith. I tried religiously to refuse to marry divorced parties. However, one couple got by me. It was a very attractive looking young couple and I failed to ask if either party had been divorced. Imagine my surprise and chagrin when a few days later I learned that I had married the most notorious divorcee in Pocahontas County.

One day an old man and a slip of a girl came to the parsonage to be married. From the dining room where Mrs. Bean was sitting came to me a laconic warning: "Herbert, don't marry that child to that old man." The warning was appreciated but not needed. I had not thought of doing such a thing. I had asked the old—I cannot call him "man" for he was not that, nor "gentleman," for he was not that; I can only call him what that 13 year girl called him, when she said to me at the close of an evening service a week or more later: "I want to thank you for not marrying me to that old 'scoundrel' the other week." He was a renegade of the "first disorder," a divorced man of 70 and I believe he received a penitentiary sentence for misstating the age of the girl.

On one afternoon I had hardly entered the home to which I was paying a pastoral call, when I was called back to the parsonage to marry a couple. The marriage was performed and I started to another home. When I entered the door the telephone was ringing and again it was for me. "Mrs. Bean said, "Herbert, there are two couples to be married." Before leaving for this second visit I had laughingly said to Mrs. Bean, "I am going to the Arbogasts; if there are ny more couples to be married call me." After the marriage of these couples, I gave up pastoral calling for the afternoon and went down town on a business errand. I happened to see the Clerk of the Court on the street. When I returned to the parsonage there was a fourth couple to be wed. They had been to the Court House to get a license to marry but found no Clerk there. I called up one of the banks and got the Clerk to the phone. He came to the parsonage, secured the needed information, and, turning to me, said, "I will not have time to go to the Court House and write out the license and give this couple time to be married, and also to make the train back to Cass. Go ahead and marry the couple and let them catch their train. I will go and write the license and bring it by to you. This was done as I knew it would be. I have never had cause to do that again.

Do not put me down as a marrying parson. I have married many couples but never sought such; to the contrary, I have refused to marry quite a few. Recalling one such may be of some interest. A father of a young woman called me over the phone one morning before the daughter reached Marlinton telling me that his daughter had left home to come to the parsonage to be married and asked me not to marry her. In a few minutes a rather nice looking young couple came in to be married. The license was handed me and the bride's name was that of the young woman the father had asked me not to marry. I talked quite a while with the couple and learned that the father's objection was that he wanted his daughter to be married at home. I suggested to the couple that they return and be married at the bride's home. This suggestion was turned down so they left the parsonage to try elsewhere. The other ministers of the town had also been called by the father, hence no wedding in Marlinton that day, but at Edray about five miles distant.

The marriage of about the handomest couple I ever married went quickly on the rocks. The young lady was from Cass. I had spent the larger part of a two-weeks' stay in that lumber town at the home of her parents only a few months earlier, while assisting a brother minister in a revival service. The groom-to-be arranged with me for the marriage on a not distant Sabbath morning. A bit later I was communicated with through a family of my church, related to the family of the bride, asking me to come to their house for the ceremony. This, of course, I did. When I returned from the marriage I remarked: "Mother (my pet name for Mrs. Bean), I believe this was the finest looking couple I have yet married."

Soon, wild rumors began to circulate, culminating in the arrest of the groom, imprisonment, and trial for bigamy. The wife from Kentucky came to the trial, and the handsome groom was given a sentence of eight years in the state prison. I felt a sense of sympathy for the deceived young woman, a bride and worse than widowed in less than a week's time. My sympathy, however, was somewhat disallowed by further facts that came to the surface a little later. Their acquaintance had been one of only two or three months. This stranger had claimed to be the son of a millionaire in Charleston and the bride-to-be boasted to her girl friends that she was marrying a millionaire and that her days of work and want would soon be over.

Just a word of advice, girls. If you are thinking of marriage, marry a man and not his money. Know more about his character account than about his bank account. To the young man thinking of marriage, let me say: "Seek not some butterfly of fashion in the filmy gauze of evasiveness, but rather some loyal soul to walk beside you on life's embattled road in royal comradeship, the princess of your common way. Happily wedded souls will find the flux of the hearthstone fires of love will weld two souls into one—in hall or hut they bear and rear their household in a palace of peace."

Sometime during my stay at Marlinton there occurred a marriage of a "woodhick" from Pennsylvania, I believe, and a buxom lass from the wooded ways of West Virginia. I had married many such couples before, but in this marriage something unusual occurred which had never occurred under my eyes before, nor has it since, and to this day the act is unsolved. This groom was a magnificent type of physical manhood and dressed in all the splendor of his forest fashion:

Lock McClintic, a prominent attorney, his son also an attorney, and his daughter, a stenographer, had returned to their home from Mr. McClintic's office at near the midnight hour. The men went immediately up the stairs. Miss McClintic stood on the stair landing and turned toward the rear of the hall, attracted by a light. The stooping form of a man was seen, which caused a scream from Miss McClintic. The man immediately disappeared through the window and by the coal chute over a stone wall; and then past the residence of Frank Hill, another prominent attorney. The McClintics looked into but did not enter the kitchen with the oil saturated table linens lying ready for the torch. Immediately a call was put in for blood-hounds from Hinton.

The next morning the whole town was alive to the occurrences of the night. During that morning I happened to be talking for a few moments with a young man, Pritchard by name, a clerk in Richardson's Hardware, in front of the store, when a man who owned and operated a restaurant next door, came and spoke to us saying: "This thing is getting serious. We ought to send for a detective and catch the man who is doing all this burning." He followed these statements with a question. "Pritchard, who was the fourth man with us pulling the hose reel the other night?" Pritchard replied: "I don't know." "Well" said Mr. H., "I believe he may be the man who is causing all this alarm." Pritchard went into the store followed by "Mr. H." who insisted he believed that the stranger, this fourth man, was the man doing all the firing of homes. Finally Pritchard said: "Mr. H., I believe you were the "fourth man," I am almost certain you were and Miss McClintic says she would recognize the man." The reply came back: "No, you are all mistaken," and "Mr. H." went out in search of Miss McClintic. As it developed, he happened to meet Miss McClintic on the street and accosted her with the statement that he had heard that she had said she would recognize the man who tried to set fire to her home last night. This man had never, to her knowledge, spoken to her before. Her answer to him was more, perhaps, than he was looking for: "I did not say that I could recognize him; but that I thought I would recognize the cap he wore. However, that makes little difference as we are looking for bloodhounds from Hinton on the mid-day train." At once "Mr. H." replied: "Those hounds will eat me up. I must see the sheriff and get him to lock me up." This he did and was locked up. The hounds were taken to the McClintic home, got the scent and under leash followed the path in the way taken by the fire-bug to where he had been taken up the street leading to the Court House. There the hounds turned suddenly in the direction of the jail where the fire-bug was awaiting their coming. Arriving at the gateway to the Court yard the hounds followed in the direction taken by "Mr. H." to the jail entrance and in the jailor's living room identified his prisoner. The man with the hounds said: "That is your man?" Marlinton rested that night and many nights since. The parsonage and other homes were found on a list for the fire-bug's torch.

I learned from this weird experience, through which all Marlinton went, many fundamentals of life in this world of divine ordering and yet of sin's devastating derangement. The innocent often suffer because of the sins of others (about two years before this time I had married this man to one who proved herself through hard and trying years a good wife, I believe). Outward appearances are often deceptive. Derangement of mind often is clothed in an attractive physique. The grace of God still may bring soundness of mind to the maniac, of many types and transform the sinning soul into one of virtue. Some years later, Mrs. Bean and I and, doubtless, the younger children were returning one night to Hinton. When walking through a train car ahead of ours I noticed "Mr. H." and his wife together in a seat. I spoke to them and talked with them. I think I record nearly accurately "Mr. H's" words to me. "Mr. Bean, I am a changed man. I have been converted and I am a member of the church trying to live a Christian life. My wife and I are going to Hinton to visit some of her people across the river in Raleigh County." I talked with them for a while expressing my joy with them in their return to freedom and a chance and purpose to live a new life.

About three months before we were transferred to Berryville, Virginia, for a successful pastorate, as far as one may judge, our last child was born, Addie Rebekah. What a trip! Then off we went from Marlinton to Ronceverte, to Clifton Forge, to Eagle Mountain for a short visit, to Natural Bridge Station, and on to Berryville. . .

hightop shoes (more than half-way to the knees) strongly laced, heavy soles about an inch thick with pointed spikes thereon useful in securing a standing on a fallen tree when peeling tanbark therefrom, heavy woolen socks running above the top of the shoes and rolled down a bit. The trousers were of heavy and stout jeans rolled a bit above the knee presenting a view of rugged and muscular manhood. Completing his attire was a heavy woolen overshirt with a rather broad collar, falling over, laced front usually left open or loosely laced, sleeves rolled above the elbow, with the lower part of overshirt hanging loose outside of the trousers. All topped, in this instance, by a broad-brim wool hat set jauntily but firmly upon his head. I have already described the bride except to say that she was comely and neatly dressed.

When the couple entered the parsonage, the young man failed to remove his hat. I went upstairs to my study for the ritual which to this day I use, not trusting to my verbal memory. The couple was seated. When I asked them to stand, I noticed the man had not removed his hat. A table was near-by and I remarked, "Sir, if you desire to remove your hat, just put it on the table at your side." Quick as a flash came his reply: "By George, Sir, I would as soon be married with it on as off!" My reply was: "It is your wedding, as you choose!" As far as I could testify in court, he may still be wearing a hat.

What about the Price family? Mrs. Price was a writer of verse and of no mean ability. Dr. James Price was a practicing physician with home comradeship in a younger brother, Dr. Norman, and a sister, whose name escapes me, who became a very prominent doctor in New York City. In conversation with Dr. James Price, counted a bit odd by some, who, I fear, failed to really know him. One day I was handed a little envelope used for pills and tablets on which he had written: "My prescription, regardless of creed, cult or what not, is that of the Christian religion, actually lived through four succeeding generations, would effect a physical, mental and spiritual regeneration of men." The Hon. Andrew Price was a talented lawyer and writer and Democratic politician. Calvin Price was editor and publisher of a Democratic weekly, The Pocahontas Times. Some years before my Marlinton pastorate, indeed in the beginning of lumbering on a large scale in that wooded area, an untried writer, "the young editor" let his imagination run away with his reason and wrote in his paper that he believed Knapp's Creek area would produce one million feet of good white pine lumber. The editor of the Greenbrier Independent laughed at the "mathematical folly of the young editor." "He laughs best who laughs last" fits well here. It is Calvin Price's time to laugh at the Editor of the Greenbrier Independent. Hear him laugh. "Final statistics are in. The Young Editor acknowledges now his error in judgment—to date more than ten million feet of select white pine lumber have been cut and marketed from Knapp's Creek. Which of us two was more in error!"

During my second year in Marlinton my father died, full of years and of worthy activities, though at times not apparently well paid in material returns. He had been an officer in the Confederate army. He was a miller in southern Maryland in earlier manhood, a merchant in Virginia following the War Between the States; he was Paymaster in construction of the Buchanan and Clifton Forge Railway, then in the employ of Col. H. C. Parsons, Vice President of The Richmond and Alleghany Railroad, in which employ he traveled over Raleigh County, West Virginia, investigating the coal prospects in that County, during which time we lived in Hinton, West Virginia.

Later in Virginia, in Botetourt County, he adventured iron ore mining projects at Big Hill, Sandbank Mountain, and Deer Mountain. He managed Daggers Springs for years, taught school here and there, edited a paper at Ashland, Virginia, and went to Corning, New York, where several of my brothers were employed. In his latter years he built a grain and saw mill, run by water power, also a home (where mother died in 1906) and a store building near-by where he embarked again in the mercantile business without success. He was a well-read cultured man with the imagination of a poet. He tried to sell goods to the rhythm of the soul, and in consequence the flow of his life limped, but not the stoic honesty of his nature. He died at the home of his daughters in Baltimore and was buried beside his wife. His five sons and a favorite nephew, Dabney Herndon Echols, were the pall-bearers. There was a simple service in Galatia Presbyterian Church before burial in the beautiful little churchyard nearby. In this memoried and hallowed spot, their bodies lie and mother and father wait the final home-coming of their children. The epitaph upon my father's inscribed stone is: "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? Or who shall stand in His holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul into vanity, nor sworn deceitfully." Psalm 24:3 & 4.

There are several more incidents of interest to report. The Sheriff of Pocahontas County lived at Marlinton, and, while a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church elsewhere in the county, he was a rather regular attendant at the services of our church and was one of the most fearless men I ever knew. During my pastorate at Marlinton the wife of the Sheriff died and was buried from Droop Mountain Church. Following this service I was asked to go with the Sheriff to the scene of the battlefield. The fight there must have been only a skirmish. The Sheriff told me the Confederates were being driven by the Bluecoats when a young lieutenant called upon a man in Gray to surrender, "John, I will surrender to you! How are Dad and Mother?"

The lot on which the present splendid church edifice was erected was bought during my pastorate. Through quite a number of weeks Marlinton was in the throes of a burning fear. As memory lifts this fear out of the ashes of thirty long years, I recall that a boarding house near the depot was burned practically to the ground. At that time some of us recalled a recent fire in Cass, twenty-five miles north of Marlinton, where a similar building had been burned with the loss of

Ray Bennett

Ray Eugene Bennett, 70, of Adrian, Michigan, formerly of Green Bank, died Monday, December 26, 1994, in Bixby Hospital, Adrian.

Mr. Bennett was of the Lutheran faith. He was a licensed liquor handler and a World War II Army veteran.

He was born May 4, 1924, at Green Bank, a son of the late Patrick Henry and Maggie Mullenax Bennett.

A son, Terry Bennett, preceded him in death.

Surviving him are his former wife, Lorraine Alderman, of Hanover, Michigan; two daughters, Jeanie Schram, of Somerset Center, Michigan, and Renee Pollet, of Jackson, Michigan; three sisters, Sylvia Sheets, of Beverly Hills, Florida; Elva Potts, of Charleston, and Pearl Waybright, of Arbovale; two brothers, Marvin Bennett, of St. Albans, and Bobbie Bennett, of Columbia, South Carolina; and grandchildren, Christopher, Samuel, Craig, Scott and Colby.

Funeral services were held at Wallace and Wallace Funeral Home in Arbovale on Friday at 11 a.m., with burial in the Arbovale Cemetery.

Memorial donations may be made to the American Lung Association.

Sheridan Browning

Sheridan Browning, 53, of Marlinton, died January 17, 1995, at Raleigh General Hospital, Beckley.

He was born on April 16, 1941, the son of Mrs. Mae Williamson Browning of Greenshoal, and the late Boyd Browning.

Mr. Browning was a disabled construction worker and a Baptist.

Other survivors include daughters, Jennie Rebecca Browning, of Michigan, and Perlina Mae Browning, of Marlinton; sons, Sheridan Boyd Browning and Curtis Browning, both of Marlinton; sisters, Jane Abbott, of Chapmanville, Elois Farmer, of Big Creek, Lucille Dunn and Perlina Sumler, both of Michigan, Janice Browning and Owetta Abbott, both of Greenshoal; brothers, Curtis Browning, of Oceana, and Boyd Browning, of Michigan.

Services were held Friday at Evans Funeral Home, in Chapmanville, with Elder Archie Maynard and Elder Gilbert Maynard officiating. Burial was in the Meeks Cemetery, Coppertrace of Little Harts.

Eula May Batchelder

Eula May Batchelder, 70, of Garden City, South Carolina, died August 25, 1994, at her home.

Ota Hefner turns 103

If a recipe exists for living for a century, Ota Hefner will tell you one of the ingredients is dancing.

"Dancing made me live so long," she said Tuesday. "I danced all my life."

Hefner said she danced every other night or so, and, while she stayed in Florida for a few months, she danced "a lot."

"I wore beautiful dresses when I danced," she reminisced. "I only had a boyfriend once in a while."

Hefner still has her dresses. And she'll dance a step or two with help, she said.

"I can't dance by myself," she added.

Dancing might not be the lone ingredient, considering her grandmother lived to be 101.

Hefner was born near where she now lives on Seebert Lane and walked to school in both the river community of Seebert and on to Hillsboro for higher grades.

She has been widowed for more than 60 years. Hefner's husband, Andy, who was born in 1866, died in 1938. They married in 1919.

They had two children, Winters and Alec, who still lives with her in the house she had built in 1939.

The family kept boarders in a house that had been a Civil War hospital. And Hefner baked hot biscuits every morning for the four or five men who went off to W. W. Harper's sawmill on Stamping Creek.

She also worked at the telephone office at Hillsboro in the days when operators connected calls. She was working there for a Baltimore newspaper collection until her family moved. E. W. Nelson, now deceased, collected the call from a local. That person was George Andrew Lewis.

"He came up with the news we still need The Progressive Times," Hefner said. "I still read the paper the first thing when it comes," she said. "Read The Progressive Times when I was very little. I thought it was wonderful."

Hefner has lived through happy times and depression, war and peace. She was born into a world that had changed little in the preceding 100 years and followed the rushing current of a century overrun with changes. She is mismatch to a flock of five grandchildren, 11 great-grandchildren and 10 great-great-grandchildren.

Although her hearing is not what it used to be, her health is pretty good, she said.

"I'm getting old now," she said. "When you get 103, you get old, don't you?"

Anna Hamrick

Anna Fitzwater Hamrick, age 60, of Marlinton, died Monday, July 3, 2000, at her home, following a serious illness.

Memoir For Sherman Hammons and Maggie Hammons Parker

The Hammons family of Marlinton has been diminished by the death of Sherman Hammons during the Labor Day weekend. His friends will miss his music and tales - but even more his presence, personality, and philosophy. His music and conversation revealed a tolerant love of humankind (occasionally seasoned with a wry chuckle) and a firm sense of the importance of the natural world.

For Sherman, life was to be lived close to nature. His was not a contemporary wilderness without people, but a mountainous forest with animal, plant, and person in graceful and reciprocal relation. Like others in the family, his knowledge of the woods was nothing short of encyclopedic. Save for a handful of mysteries, every creature and plant could be named and its habits described. The mysterious sights and sounds that animated certain of Sherman's tales served to remind us that not everything in the world could be explained.

For Sherman, history was no more distant and remote than nature. His grandfather's and father's time, spanning the era from before the Civil War to the end of the logging boom in this century, came alive in stories about panthers, hunting and fishing camps, and the arrival of the steam skidder and Shay railroads that signaled the final victory of modern times.

Sherman's vision is in a real sense a family vision, and this is a good moment to pay tribute to his sister Maggie Hammons Parker, who passed away a little over a year ago. She is well remembered for her phenomenal repertory of folksongs, unrivaled among contemporary West Virginians, but her knowledge was by no means limited to music. She shared Sherman's historical sensibility and ken of the natural worlds, adding to them a magical touch with traditional cookery. City visitors like us never expected that "bread" (biscuits), pinto beans, fried chicken, green beans, and homemade apple sauce could be transformed into a symphony for the palate.

It is good to know that of Sherman and Maggie's generation, three siblings carry on in Pocahontas County. We trust that Dasie Hammons Buzzard and Emmy Hammons Roberts, despite difficulties with their health, and Burl Hammons, this generation's genius with a violin, will keep the family's traditions alive for many years to come.

In Memoriam

This letter was received by Mrs. Mary McNeil Hilleary upon the death of her husband, George Louia Hilleary:

Mary Dear - There is an old saying, "Turn always toward the sunshine and the shadows will fall behind you." Right now, I imagine, the clouds are hanging heavy on your horizon, and it seems the sun will never shine again. But God, in His love and wisdom, has promised us our burdens will not be more than we can carry if we lean on Him for strength and courage. He is the sunshine toward whom we must turn, and the warmth of His love will cause the shadows to fall behind us.

Some of the sunshine that will shine forever for you is the wonderful memories Louia left behind. He was truly the man who lived by the side of the road and was a friend to all. To each who came near him he gave of his gift of living, the gift of wit, of laughter, and, above all, the gift of human kindness and warm friendship that made him loved by old and young alike. If we, who were with him so little, have such pleasant memories, then how great must be your store of tender, loving memories stored up down through the years. Of course, your biggest piece of sunshine is three beautiful children who are so much a part of Louia. Living for them, I am sure, the shadows will lift enough for the future to be bearable, and that behind the scenes Louia will say, "That is my brave Mary."

If at any time we Kramers can help you in any way, please tell us. Our thoughts, sympathy and prayers have been with you and will continue to be.

Sincerely, Marie Kramer.

Weiford Removed

Not too long after he was appointed Prosecuting Attorney in Pocahontas County, replacing David Arrington who recently left that post, Walt Weiford was disqualified!

Greenbrier County Chief Circuit Judge Charles Lobban, in response to a defense motion filed by David Farmer, removed Weiford from acting as prosecuting attorney at the Kastigar hearing in which he may be called as a witness.

The matter entails Jacob Beard, formerly of Dog Mountain, who was convicted of the murders of two young women. Beard is currently serving a life term and is presently being housed at the Mt. Olive state penitentiary.

The murders, which occurred in 1980, were not prosecuted until 1983 and after a three-week trial, culminated in the sentencing of Jacob Beard to life without mercy.

Earlier this year, Beard appealed his conviction to the WV Supreme Court which ruled a Kastigar hearing must be held before the case can be closed. This type of hearing must show investigators didn't use any information provided by a defendant while under terms of an immunity agreement to convict him of a crime.

Beard contends an immunity agreement he made with then-Pocahontas County Prosecutor Steve Hunter in 1983 was violated during his 1993 trial. However, Weiford contended that while he was unaware of the immunity agreement, there was no "contamination of evidence." Judge Lobban appointed Greenbrier County Prosecutor Richard H. Lorensen to represent the state in the Kastigar hearing scheduled for March 5.
